<th>The Universities of Eastern Finland (UEF) and Hong Kong (HKU) are proposing to extend their already established cooperation in the field of food safety and toxicology into developing a joint curriculum at Master/honors levels that aims to provide training in global health related to nutrition and food safety focusing on current national and international issues. It is an integrated programme covering nutrition in health and disease, nutritional epidemiology, nutritional concerns of maternal, child and aging population, food safety and security as well as social aspects of nutrition and food safety. The overall aim is to combine Finnish and Chinese expertise into one unique curriculum providing a global perspective on population health and well-being.</th>
